As the day breaks through the doorway and i'm still chained to this house but you call me and I follow and act like i'm so proud still reading the sidewalk and I don't know why I still can't and it smells like morning news seem to pull away from you

Watch the window

time means nothing

watch the window

'til I see you coming

Born a beggar

will you ever

see me more than Pavlov's hungry dog

see no colours

live another

day to feed on everything you are...and you are

When the day sleeps and the sunshine no longer burns my eyes and the sound of your footsteps is the only thing that lies between me and the feeling that life fills these four walls that cage me completely just waiting on your call

time means nothing

'til I see you coming

day to feed on everything you are...on everything you are

I run for you

a fall so hard

my secrets are buried in the yard

day to feed on everything you are
