Always but a passenger
And not really there
I make room for the consignment
I relinquish my breath
To sneeze immortality at the sight of your missing aversion

I'm sorry; you must have confused me with someone else
Someone who cares
The way you voice my name makes me so benevolent
As you recycle your pets
You put yourself in my place,
When there is only... only me

She keeps her motives in plain sight
But I always choose to look away
As I'm drifting sideways my mind is left behind Trapped in a demented smile

A viciously catchy tune entangled in my spinal cord

else
Someone who cares
The way you voice my name makes me so benevolent
As you recycle your pets
You put yourself in my place,
When there is only... only me

I know
Your mouth can move
But you don't fall through
I fall through you

I see
Your eyes can soothe
You don't read through it:
I fall for you

else
Someone who cares
The way you voice my name makes me so benevolent
As you recycle your pets
You put yourself in my place,
When there is only... only me
