In this sinless city, we wear calluses on our hands.
From empty, vain hand-shaking, we see the guilt has left again.
And all will fall, with or without our good will.
So we fool them all, who pray for those who never will.

And we both let go.(x2)

Never been much for pity. Never been much for wishing them well.
But I can't help but sever the ties they tied so tight, so well.
And on one side they're holding on to what we were.
And here we are, holding the hands that we severed.

And we both let go. (x2)

The fire burns like cancer. The scarring lasts forever.
We all play tricks on fools that see us as their sinless
answer.(x3)

And over and over again.(x3)

Don't say this isn't what you're used to.
I've seen followers like you. I've let down followers like you.(x2)

The fire burns like cancer. The scarring lasts forever.
We all play tricks on fools that see us as their sinless
answer.

The fire burns like cancer. The scarring lasts forever.
We all play tricks on fools that see us as their sinless
answer.

The fire burns like cancer. The scarring lasts forever.
We all play tricks on fools that see us as their only answer.
