As I kneel at the shallow grave of the stanger I used to be.

I wash thy hands in the blood of pride and vanity.
And where a heart once beat lays a ston so cold it could freeze the fires of hell.

This is where wee close the book becasue there's no more stories to tell.

You helped me kill that man that I used to be, I'm dead inside.

These are the reasons I won't justify, This world you
built of twisted lies.

And in my memories I can see the truth.
There to remind me of the scars of you.

Is it hopeless to try and change what just wasn't meant to be?

Or should I just accept this fate, I've been handed as my destiny?

These are the reasons I won't justify, this world you
built of twisted lies.

And in my memories I can see the truth.
There to remind me (there to remind me) of these
scars of you.

These are the reasons I won't justify, this world you
built of twisted lies.

And in my memories I can see the truth.
scars of you.

These scars of you.

Cauterized

The story starts, the story ends, nothing left, but to pretend.

We never loved, nothings here, the memory will just disappear.

Born to live, born to die, but never truly alive.

Your convictions ensure nothing will survive.

And as your world falls apart I will stand here and laugh.

And when the world is no more you will see something are worth fighting for.

A new day, a new way, to place the blame once more, you know we're reaching for the sun. (It burns my eyes).

Do you care my nightmares show I never learned to read between the lines?

(My wounds have healed) their cauterized.

The light of mankind buried for eternity under six feet of pain and loneliness

So fill your hearts with remorse and empathy as I unfold this tale of pathetic tragedy.

A new day, a new way, to place the blame once more, you know we're reaching for the sun. (It burns my eyes).

Do you care my nightmares show I never learned to read between the lines?

(My wounds have healed) their cauterized.

The world is bleak, your bed's been made; now sleep in it, don't be afraid.

The world is bleak, your bed's been made; now sleep in it, don't be afraid.

And as your world falls apart I will stand here and laugh.

And when the world is no more you will see something are worth fighting for

A new day, a new way, to place the blame once more, you know we're reaching for the sun, we will survive!

A new day, a new way, to place the blame once more, you know we're reaching for the sun. (It burns my eyes).

Do you care my nightmares show I never learned to read between the lines?

(My wounds have healed) their cauterized.
