You truly are your mother's son Raised on praise, doctors' appointments and getting what you want Your school years passed you by without a scratch Your father's pride, good intentions and your mother's loving hands

Being young at heart became a sin,
So you grew up and you gave in

Remember when you said, all you wanted was to be where we are today
I remember when you said that you'd be in this with us
'til the very end.

Peacefully we watched you slip away In the depths of the drugs and the mistress on whose mental state you'd prey If she was the spark to ignite that flame, then we were the floods
When the fires came but she held the torches high for you that day

Remember when you said, all you wanted was to be
where we are today
I remember when you said that you'd be in this with us
'til the very end.

Being young at heart became a sin,
So you grew up and you gave in

I remember when you said, all you wanted was to be
where we are today
I remember when you said that you'd be in this with us
'til the very end.
Until the very end, my dear old friend
