Pain runs right through me like cold iron through my blood
She said she didn't mean it but it sure meant a lot to me
Life is too serious, to actually take anything seriously You get to feel contained can only talk to your self for so long

Life's like a teardrop that you've been holding in for days
You get to feel broke like a record skipping the trying
You sit in the silence, staggered with all of your pride You get to feel contained as you're stepping out into the light

And then you catch a fever hell that's the life you lead
And then you change your cloths to hide your skin tone
And you talk real loud to hide your ego

Life is too plain and simple to actually take anything seriously
You get to feel tired and disillusioned as you let yourself run free Life's like a tear drop that you've been holding in for
You get to feel broke like a record skipping the trying

And then you catch a fever, to be an under grad and think you know everything
