I walked into the house and I could see it written down
I didn't have to read a word, I could feel it all around
Somehow you escaped my love while I was still asleep
You started like a saint and now you finish like a thief

You've Changed
I still wear my ring
I walked into my honesty and saw it to be false
Like an early indication of a failing protocol
I wrote it down on paper and I left it by the phone
I wanted you to find it when I was not at home

You've Changed
You used to be so sweet
You've Changed
Now my exit is complete
I'm only half of what I wish that I was, I wish that I was You've said it before, that I talk too much, that I say too much
But you'll never, never tell me what to do again

You've Changed
I still wear my ring
I walked into six months and I started at a run
Cause I am not the guy and you are not the one
I walked into a lover and look what she became
But a rose is still a rose by any other name

You've Changed, I still wear my ring
You've Changed, I am still so much the same
You've Changed, You used to be so sweet
You've Changed, now my exit is complete
You change and you change and you change
