Lyrics: Lars

The city wakes up from the night's slumber
And the engines start rolling
But he did not search for productivity
Nor did he search for wealth

And the city is captured by television
Endless entertainment and commerce

But I did not search for glamour
And I did not want to consume

The city wakes up and the
Talking fills up the air
But she did not search for shallowness
And she did not search for popularity

So quick to reject / So late to embrace
Initially so determined
What we are looking for / But soon more unsure
So many disappointments

Will we dare to keep on searching
For something still unknown

So easy to know what we don't want
What are we looking for?

Will we dare to keep on searching
For something still unknown
