With a sigh I leave LA behind me, 50 miles to the edge of the county.

Drive through Blythe without a soul in sight.

Ain't it amazing how the landscapes change- even in a half a day?

No matter how far I go, Deirdre is always there to find me.

That's no way to live my life.

First it's bumper-to-bumper on a city grid, use a tank
just to drive a mile.

Freeway ain't so free anymore.

Then it's windmills as far as the eye can see, pushing turbines deep underground
