Wake up try on your new disguise
Wouldn't recognize you anyway, would they?
Dead leaves lie down beneath your feet
As you step into the street
Notice the distance between hearts and homes
But still you know it's all right
You're not looking back this time
You know it's all right
You're stepping on the cracks and you feel fine

Don't waste your breath
You wouldn't want this anyway
If you did I think I'd let you
Talk this to death
Run circles like we're out of place
And all along I knew that we would sputter out
We would sputter

Outside construction workers pour
A brand new basement floor
But then the ground starts shaking fault lines to your own front door
I looked at this and thought of you
And all that is and isn't true
With the strength left in me walked on while the walls came down
And it's all right
You're not looking back this time
You know it's all right
I'm stepping on the cracks and I feel fine

Don't waste your breath
You wouldn't want this anyway
If you did I think I'd let you
Talk this to death
Run circles like we're out of place
And all along I knew that we would sputter out
We would sputter
