is this how it was intended a sunrise over smokestacks in the midwest
the beauty of this abandoned factory christmas lites blinking on and off all out of time and what used to be your big (?) of a middle class america

im trying to believe in you but all these satellites and shattered dreams are fucking up my view please dont forget who you really are cause nothing really matters when were gone.

fell in love with his keno waitress they honeymooned in memphis they were married by the drive-up window trailer parks, neon signs, and an empty box of lucky strikes all used up on the dashboard of america

but this world has sold its fate for parking lots and drunk sincerity

cause nothing really matters when were... youll be saddened to know the train tracks you once walked as a young boy are now nothing but a graveyard please dont forget how small we really are

nothing really matters. lets go im trying to believe in you
