Even those worn-out words, i love you, take on a wonderful new meaning
When i use them to express my love for you; theyre words for you only
In a sunny spot on sunday, its an ordinary sunday like any other I quietly pray that this lasts forever and you keep chatting

What do you like so much about me thats a hard question youve just asked So for now ill stop watching the movie weve rented and just gaze at you

I love your fully blooming smile, even seeing it every day isnt enough
And thats without even mentioning that amazing body that looks good no matter what you wear

And thats just your looks, what about the important things inside you You dont back down when youre pissed off and even snorting really annoys you But theres so, so, so much more than that I cant really describe it properly
I dont think you need a reason to fall in love
That parts a mystery to me, so please forgive me

Even those worn-out words, i love you, take on a
wonderful new meaning
words for you only
In a sunny spot on sunday, its an ordinary sunday like
any other
The more of this ordinary time that passes, the more comfortable we feel together

You pretend to be strong, so the fleeting tears you show occasionally are a white flag When we dont say anything, its exactly that that keeps me from looking away

Sadness and pain
Of course life brings all kinds of things like that But just your casual hang in there gives me strength Whenever your little back trembles i hold you right away
Even if the scenery we can see from the window changes
Be by my side, terrible sleeping habits and all

Even those worn-out words, i hate you, mean the opposite to me
If its you saying them when youre sulking, theyre words for me only
In a sunny spot on sunday, its an ordinary sunday like
any other
Ill say it one more time: i love you, all the time

Its a sunday like any other Its an ordinary sunday
But its a special sunday
