Once again I wrote a song about my childish fears
Staring back at the path of my whole life
My footprints on the ground look like infected wounds Eating my own flesh poisoned blood runs through my veins
Will this be the last time I close my eyes?

And how could I know a kiss would change my life
I can't forget the steps we made together
You took my hands and tried to ease my pain
But I crossed the deadline

Once again I bleed these words to fill my childish voids
Looking down to the stairs of my whole life
I can taste the flavour of your blood on my lips
I lick my wounds to cleanse the infection
I'll worm my way through this sterile ground

And how could I know a breath would change my life
I can't forget the steps we made together
You took my hands and tried to ease my pain
But I crossed the deadline

And how could I know a kiss would change my life
And how could I know a breath would change my life
I can't forget the steps we made together

(How could I know)
A kiss would change my life
(I can't forget)
The steps we made together
(You took my hands)
And tried to ease my pain
(But I crossed the deadline)
I crossed the deadline
