And it ends like this with a quote from an 80's song "sing me to sleep" she was hoping for it all along i took the letter from my bed and blacked out every line i read except for seven words that made so much sense to her it's like one voice in the choir buried by the rest holding our breath til there's nothing left it's too hard taking the world on too hard taking the world on she's the one true artist the last of a dying breed an unguarded heart is the one thing you'll never need the snow has never looked like this the city never stops to rest she's off to start a war is this worth fighting for?

this is like the flash that lights up your picture coming from the crowd throwing fists through the air when there's no one there it's too hard taking the world on

carving our names so the past remains it's too hard taking the world on

stand up, the keys, and then the car drive up, the porch, and then the door two knocks, the lock, and there you are say what i could not say before standing our ground til the walls come down
