I have been waiting on a response for days There has been a complication It seems your heart needed a break From pumping the blood through your veins And keeping the oxygen ok I still see your face Any day when I see your eyes in a bottle that was way too tall I finished it to just see if we could talk Now I am speaking with your ghost again It's Telling me that I don't understand Can we be friends in another lifetime And I might pretend That we are right now Jumping feelings from a dying dream

I drank the poison from a black moon sleep Then I saw you I felt your kiss in a dream I had I felt your skin in a monument

Then I went home to live a brand new life without you And buried your face Beneath the giant shadows of the clouds And they will stay there under ground But no matter what I do I never will stop talking to you

I never did get the last word in You said I always did I never did get the last word in You said I always did I never did get the last word in You said I always did I never did get the last word in You said I always did I never did get the last word in You said I always did I never did get the last word in You said I always did I never did get the last word in You said I always did I never did get the last word in You said I always did

I never did get the last word in You said I always did
