I, I never got to say, all the words I should have said and all the words you should have read there was time, when we could (when we were fine)
co-exist, and never raise a fist the angers buried it's time for us to end this

you could have held on only if you put down the bottle.

so long see you soon I'm throwing these words out to you hoping that you'll hear my voice hoping that you made the right choice
you could have held on the sin goes on and on from fathers to sons and from child to child you had the power to stop it in its tracks but now the burden is left with me yes it's burnt down to me and I won't go quietly I won't be like you

I may not remember every night but you can be damn sure I remember the fights from these broken bottles and to burnt cigarettes not saying goodbye is my only regret
