[The Norns decreed that whoever held the Sword of the Theru (Tiwa; Tyr) would come to rule the world, But would also meet his own demise because of the weapon. A number of Teutonic and Roman Conquerors are said to have wielded this blade. Even Atilla the Hun would have possessed This mythic weapon. According to the legend, he duke of Alva was the last one to own the sword. Ever since, the weapon has been missing.]

"Crafted by the sons of Ivald,
Once guarded in a temple,
Reflecting the morning sun,
Now a tool in the hands of the Norns.

Whoever wields it rules the world!

Given to him by a stranger
Vitellius owned the sword
Hailing him as emperor
Eventually meaning his downfall

Whoever wields it will meet his end!

"Flung by fate,
Into the hands of a German soldier
He cut off Vitellius' head
With the sacred sword"

Wherever he and his sword were found
Victory on the battlefield was assured

Time passed by
The Scourge of God held the blade
Assuring victory upon victory
Until Ildico helped fate

Whoever wields it rules the world!
