She puts her books out on the floor every night
And she knows every picture by name
I swear she's read them all more than twice
But she never says the words the same

If I could only change forever
Would it keep you here with me now
So torn apart the things we do without
So gone

She puts the same music on every night
And she dances in the corner by herself
Sometimes she's living life passing time
But to her there could be nothing else

If I could only change forever
Would it keep you here with me now
So torn apart the things we do without

So gone so gone, the things we do without
You're so gone
So gone so gone, the things we do without
You're so gone

But you'll never grown old in my eyes
