I was a curious boy with a wandering mind on a hungry search undefined in a rigid school full of concrete thought, a structured day and all that brought Logic ground in repeatable facts my big energy faded back They gave me far less than they stole they packed my head and they drained my soul

So I learned to sleep in a distant stare out beyond, unaware of a clear internal path I'd take if I'd close my eyes and fall awake

It was an instant lift, my mind grew light a lucid dream of a graceful flight Just one push and I learned to fall into the arms of the energy that voiced my call Now each dream is an epitome a beautiful glimpse at my permanent home I'm a timeless entity cloaked in skin, the eye of the universe turning in

And it's all between my ears I know my way to a magic sphere A clear internal path I take when I close my eyes and fall awake

It's a world too dense with material toys and signals laced with a lot of white noise But there's a place in me that scientists can't explain so they just get pissed
