We were at the alter on the day you were baptized everyone who held you has the moment memorized But thankful memories have mingled with a grief because the blessing was too brief That is why your birthday never passes easily we can't help imagining the person you might be In you absence our lives are not as sweet the family grows, but never seems complete Sometimes we see a babies crib and feel a spike between our ribs Something always stays awake in the empty cradle that we make When we are afraid that it will hurt to speak your name we agree in silence that you're there with us the same that familiar silence we keep returning to is a room we share with you Some of us feel guilty for not visiting your grave you are still included in the way that we behave knowing now that we never disconnect just listen to our thoughts to measure your effect Only spirits speak so clear It was our love that brought you here that's how we know you wait somewhere and each of us will hold you there
