Confused and lost, I walk towards the ledge
No longer can I live my life on the edge
Wondering, "What am I doing on the rooftop?"
Then the silence is broken by the car of a cop

Stare as far as I can while I'm up so high
Hundreds of skyscrapers loom before my eyes
I press shut my eyes and tears roll out
Can't stand it any longer, I start to scream and shout

I scream my lungs out, I scream out the pain
I scream about the things that almost drove me insane
I cry out loud for all the times I have suffered
I yell and think of the times I've cried for her

My voice erupts and echoes into the cold night air
And every single echo screams out my despair
I scream so loud I set off the alarms of cars
And the skies cry with me by dropping stars

Glass windows from the skyscrapers start to crack
And the branches of trees below me start to snap
The ground rumbles and shakes before it breaks
By now everyone in the city must be wide awake

My eyes spit out tears as I continue to scream
And the buildings start to collapse in a stream
Then I stop - I run out of things to scream about
Only utter silence now, no more screams and shouts

Dark shadows dance all around me
Can't the wind life me up and set me free?
Standing there, tears stream down my face
It's time to admit that I've lost this race
