Lyrics: R. Olson

The sun was swallowed by the shrouds on a vast horizon red as blood
The air stood still, all winds were gone, Breath got weaker than ever before They were coming in thousands, pale faces appeared Awaiting a storm from above
When the shadows swept down through devouring clouds
The reaction froze in their mesmerized eyes

Landmines crushed the ones who fled
Into cascades of blood and burning soil
A storm of flames sweeps through the air
Ruins on fire fell over weak ones who was left behind

The pressure waves comes blasting those Who still stands to the ground Claws of heat tears the pale skin from the ashes of their flesh Firewinds at lightning speed shatters a thousand deafening screams Echoes of their bleeding throats drowns into the massive light

Landmines crushed the ones who fled
Into cascades of blood and burning soil

A storm of flames sweeps through the air
Ruins on fire fell over weak ones who was left behind

Through the scattered masses swept the blinding light Their shadows was forever burnt into the bleached ground as they fled in vain.

Bloodstained and burnt comes the ones who was spared crawling out of the mist
The light of the sun can not touch their eyes from above perpetual clouds of dust Only the light from the still burning fires shall be the last they will ever see As nervegasclouds are drifting around and fills the air they must breathe

Too weak to die by their own hands they crawl among the ashes
as nervegasclouds embraces them they suffocate with bleeding throats Convulsions tears the feverous skin, epileptic chainreaction Thousand of rats spreads through the dark where Nervegasclouds shall drift forever more
