I feel the push of a stormfront, look to a darkening sky overhead

See as the first drop of water pierces electrified air

Turn back to the thunder that calls

Now the swallows fly low to the ground

She smiles in the dead of the night

And the lightning rides high on the storm

I see the black clouds in your eyes

Clouds in Eden, drowning paradise

Heaven has opened it's flood gates, rain has been pouring for days

Telephone lines are all dead

Sally, by candlelight, stares

She stares at the fire that burns, while the world is extinguished by gales

Sally, with a joyful despair, is the storm that has laid my heart bare

I see the dark love in her eyes

Eden's nightside, new paradise
