The doors open - Cohegan turns and stares He's going to see the execution All eyes are on the guards as they drag the prisoner in the crowd's uneasy in all the confusion

Now Cohegan doesn't look well and the sweat begins to pour remembering as they reached the final verdict in the court His heart was pounding in his throat - down his arm - through his chest
He wanted to be a judge (Not God)

Just then the prisoner breaks free Charging through the crowd screaming

(you won't get me)
Tackling the Judge - with his hands around his throat
It happened so suddenly - in a blink of an eye

The judge's body went limp in the prisoner's choke hold Pulling Cohegan to him saying (you won't take my soul)
Judge not or be judged yourself...

A shot rang out - the prisoner fell to the floor With Cohegan still standing his heart could take no more Taking a deep breath, he let out one final sigh
it happened so suddenly - in a blink of an eye
