You left me here, beside myself. But I'm keeping my eyes closed.

To stare into this broken mirror.

The scars from today are gone tomorrow.

And the light from the sun is burning in my back like the stares you cast so Willingly like we're vandals in love

The sweat, drips from our chins
And the rotten taste on your neck, is tainted, black with lesions
And your words, they tear me apart

And the light from the sun is burning in my back like
the stares you cast so
Willingly like we're vandals in love

But we're never leaving We're your blackened lungs, the smoke you crave
We are the dirt beneath your feet, you always pass us by while you trample us

And the light from the sun is burning in my back like
the stares you cast so
Willingly like we're vandals in love
