Waited till the morning, waited till the dawn. No-one came out from the sea.

Gazed the mountains, gazed the sky. No-one arrived from horizon.

Waited the next day. Waited the next night. ...Not a sign of the waited one.

Listened whispers, listened storms. But could not hear the eternally echoing words.

Read the prophecies, read the Word. And he knew the day was near.

...So came the waited dawn to bring the blessed light - the day was darker than ever.

Betrayed he truly was.

He's view is painted by the hologram of lies.

"The God is to sent a messiah to release us from the pain made of sins."

Dying in the depths of "sins" and decay. Can't you see we are all alone?

What is hope to you is bullshit for me. We're gazing different directions.

I've lost my hope and I don't want it back. Man stood humble expecting Him to came.

...Waited for ages. Waited for generations. Always trusting. Always hoping.

He is the one in the name of God. To bring the salvation, to take us to the light, out of the sorrow, out of the grief. The one to have mercy on us.

The one to save.

...He never came, he never will.
