I'd like to thank your daddy and your mother
For bringing up a child like you;
Although I know there'll never be another,
To make a dream come true,
Here's what they had to do!

They took the moonlight out of the sky,
And put the moon right into your eye,
Like a June night, you're a heavenly thing!

They took the fragrance out of the dew,
And sprinkled roses all over you,
Like a garden, you heavenly thing!

They took the clinging vine, that's your embrace,
Stars that shine light your face,
To combine everything!

On your lips they put the breath of spring!
And then they finished, called it a day,
They took the model and threw it away,
Like an angel, you're a heavenly thing!

They took the moonlight out of the sky,
And put the moon right into your eye,
Like a June night, you're a heavenly thing!

They took the fragrance out of the dew,
And sprinkled roses all over you,
Like a garden, you're a heavenly thing!

They took the clinging vine, that's your embrace,
Stars that shine light your face,
To combine everything!

On your lips they put the breath of spring!
Then they finished, called it a day,
They took the model and threw it away,
Like an angel, you're a heavenly thing!
