The daughter's father watches, quietly we assume He's not longer with us but he left this dusty room In your name and it's an honor, it's a shame but it's your honor Take it on your shoulder 'til you can find another

That's enough for now, he should've never left you broken
He should've held you, things your father never could do
That's enough for now, he would've never left you
broken
He would've held you, things your father never told you

The century before you never could turn twenty one Years and years he waited, just watching for a son
For someone to go ahead and take the name he said
Years and years he waited and a daughter came instead

But that's enough for now, he should've never left you
broken
He should've held you, things your father never could
do
That's enough for now, he would've never left you
broken

Breathing comes in pairs, except for twice One begins and one's goodbye
Sixty years of sorrow, he got five or six of bliss Left my mother's mother without so much as a kiss, as a kiss

But that's enough for now, he never wanted to leave you broken
He would've held you, things your father never told you That's enough for now, I would've never left you broken
I would've held you, things your father never could do Words your father never told you

Sixty years of sorrow, he got five or six of bliss

Left my mother's mother without so much as a kiss
