Can you hear the wind gnawing the mountains?
In the ice castles of winter it howls alone.
The frost now unleashed soon shall us reach.
The iron gates are opening, 'tis the time for death.
...when autumn turns to winter.

Coldness knows no mercy,
the frost does not stand aside... ever!

Can you feel the icy crust piercing through your skin,
burning you deep inside?
Quit staring at the light and encounter the frost
that shall lay waste the tender sky.
...when the winter eternal arrives.

Coldness knows no mercy,
the frost does not stand aside... ever!

All warmth is vanishing, the winter's drawing nigh,
green is enshrouded by white.
In the northern courts there's an eternal crust of snow,
no summer you shall ever see, only a sky ran pale.

The eternal flame is blown out by a breeze so cold;
the winter is unmerciful in the courts of the north.
The icy glitter in the forests soon puts the weak to death,

in the heart of the winter's stronghold our time has finally come!

The hunger of the frost is growing,
your heaven it enshrouds with fury.
Coldness knows no mercy,
the frost does not stand aside... ever!

Coldness knows no mercy,
the frost never stands aside!
Welcome the winter eternal,
green enshrouded by white.

All wings are cut and the resistance is broken.

None of the angels shall survive.

The sharp cutting frost is the victor
and snow shall veil the northern ground.
Leaves are turning pale, dying in lament
and the clouds are gathering to witness.

'tis tumult of demons in the heart of winter,
with no signs of exhaust they're dancing in the white halls.

At last it's the reign of the eternal winter,
a vain hope that it will end.

Hear me!
Children of the frost!
Hear me!
This winter is forever!
