you took the land and changed it you sang into the blackened sky my own hands rearranged it breathe some life into my lungs tonight

don't go
please don't go

now the rain's washed out the valley and all the ships have sailed away i think it's only you and me and all the shadows we cast away and you say we don't belong well where do we belong?

now he's laying in the limelight and he's wishing that he had it made don't forget about your past dear you only learn with the knowledge of mistakes made

don't go
please don't go
