Seems like I'm always here within. Looking through this hole I found.

I can feel it settling inside, where the river eats my hair. Winter come alive for me, and then I could grow my eyes again.

Feels like I'm wearing thin within. Becoming less all the time.

I know someone who's drowning now, growing cold on dirty ground.

Entertaining my hate stare, I could move, but I don't care.

And if you threw it all away, I wouldn't miss it.

If you killed the world today, I wouldn't miss it.

Look around my ugly face, I wouldn't miss it.

Right here in this lonely place, I wouldn't miss it.

So I die everyday, sinking into nothing like the sun.

And if I could grow my wings again, I would shed all my skin.

I know someone who's drowning now, growing cold on dirty ground.

Entertaining my hate stare, I think it's me and I don't care.

And if you threw it all away, I wouldn't miss it.

If you killed the world today, I wouldn't miss it.

Look around my ugly face, I wouldn't miss it.

Broken in this lonely place, I wouldn't miss it.
