Tiny hands, recycled cans, the metal bands, I could not stand

The time you cried and threw your crayons across the floor

These are the things, I think about, when I'm alone without you

I wonder of your whereabouts and hope like hell
You're happy where you are

You used to say that, "You're just fine"
But I still wonder all the time

Hockey games, medical claims, police reports, terrible grade J

I'm so proud of all the things that you've done

These are the things, I think about, when I'm alone without you

I wonder of your whereabouts and hope like hell
You're happy where you are

"I'm alright, I'm alright"

I can see through everything you say, and all the lessons I never learned

You used to say that, "You're just fine"

But I still wonder all the time

Do you still believe in the stories told

To you by my friends and I when you were four years old?

How it got so cold that words just froze

We had to wait 'til summer to find out what was said

One of the best times that we had

I know I say that, I'm just fine

But I hope you wonder from time to time

I was nervous from the start that our muscles might tear us apart

(Are muscles tearing us apart?)

From the words that carve our lives, to the words that take us by surprise
(I was never taken by surprise)

From the sounds that disappear to the changes we begin to fear
(I can hear you clearly)
One day, I'll fail to breathe and all you'll have are memories
(All we are are memories)
