

New York Room "Kiss Of The Succubus" in the silence of my empty bed I sleep with your voice and the things you said but all of your words seem to lose their meaning when I am left alone here dreaming of all the dying cold, blue flowers and all the lonely silent hours I have spent without you here in isolation and silent fear in the corners of my empty heart I keep your bones where your love held a part and left to die, drowning slowly like all the words that you once told me about the sadness in your painted stare I looked into it but found nothing there except desire and your burning need of desperation and selfless greed in the stillness of my empty room I see your ghost in a shrouded tomb you lift your burning hands in the air you fall to your knees in your despair you cry in sorrow, you shout their names but your dry tears are lost in the flames and when it's over and your body dies your pain's eternal and your left with your lies
