stop this pain, release me from your embrace wipe the tears from your eyes, smear the blood on my face shelter me from this shame, shelter me from disgrace shelter me from all harm, keep me warm, keep me safe

shelter
lurks in tall shadows
sorrow

drink from the wounds your claws carved into me blood is moved without veins outside of my body close your eyes, on your knees, bow your head down to me do not speak, do not breathe, do not hear, do not see

in a lonely world, I could abandon in an empty word, I could belong I could be someone in a warmer light, I would not shudder but in my denial, I would not suffer I would be alone in a distant place, in a broken smile that I could wander, I could wonder I could find a home demons have no fire, angels have no wings tears do not need eyes to cry, but the water still stings tongues do not need lies to speak of our sufferings time does not need hands to turn and pull at the strings

innocence and laughter, faith and healing comforts me from the pain, bandages my bleeding in isolation we walk, and in death we dream in preparation we sleep to keep from feeling

sorrow
