You rise.
You lift the weight from off your head.
Amazed, I'm stunned to see the sun.
We're almost there.
You look me square in the eyes and I can't tell if its you.
Is it in you to free the hope you've tied?
Its crazy, I swear the sun had died.

Ever since the day I was born I filled the void by
crawling in arms.
I think he swore to never let me go.
And just because you run from the norm
I think he's saying, "Don't be alarmed."
You'll grow your hair long and swear that you can see.
We'll see.

Alas, you hear a whisper after you're gone. (Are we still safe?)
I try to tear this wall down. (We build it back up again.)
Has Heaven dared to pull me out of the corners that I've crept into?
Is it in you to free the hope you've tied?
Its crazy, I swear the sun had died.

Ever since the day I was born I filled the void by
crawling in arms.
I think he swore to never let me go.
And just because you run from the norm
I think he's saying, "Don't be alarmed."
You'll grow your hair long and swear that you can see.

Ever since the day I was born I filled the void by
crawling in arms.
I think he swore to never let me go.
And just because you run from the norm
I think he's saying, "Don't be alarmed."
You'll grow your hair long and swear that you can see.
We'll see.
