FORGETTING SOMETHING

When I take the time to sit in my back yard, and my idiot neighbor isn't working on his fing car, no airplanes are trashing my ears, with there frantically flapping wings, just for one pure moment just the sway of trees, just the light giving color of sky, just the motion of the atmosphere passing thru my body, just the feeling of no thought thinking thru my mind.
And I remember I'm forgetting something, the wonder at the bottom of the day, the eloquence of nothing to say, the comfort of not knowing the way.
When I take the time to really feel your hand in mine, without my movies mind perverting my slow erection, I know there is more you can express in kisses and fluid touch, then words could ever breed and nurse, I need to study heaven in your earth print eyes, take the balm of your beauty on my wounded flesh, we don't have to sell our souls to buy the kingdom, we've got more than enough treasure to pay the rent.
meaning of the lips behind her kiss, the beauty of the static colored bliss, the taste of god that flavors all of this.
In this mostly bullshit hustle we call our lives, the melodies we sing are carved with knives, just can't seem to bridge heaven and earth, than tell me what is building bridges worth, but you can not have your pride and eat it too, do anything just to keep from having nothing to do, now we're stuck inside this maze guided by the clock, living some kind of past tense future shock.

I step out side and breath deep the meaning, look up into a night time sky full of more than understanding will allow, and I feel something that's worth more than any philosophy can provide, I measure this infinite pulse in my heartbeats syncopation.
And I remember I'm forgetting something, forgetting that the sky is my true mirror, forgetting that the past is getting nearer, forgetting that my memory is getting clearer.
