INDOOR WORLDS

Â© Electric Babylon Music Author: M.M.

The air conditioner kicks on with it's gentle hum, the cooling winds of

kingdom come, and the mercy of the electric weather key, can't amend

the tyranny of electricity, the study of inevitable collision, has given rise to this cult of indecision, living by the poetry of specifications, the static bliss in between the stations, and the wind kisses the trees and they sway to and fro, and an ulcer takes it's root where a flower should grow.

Of bathtub drains and whirling worlds the menu please,
or perhaps

another virgin to feed the mythologies, TVs glow paints surreal

aftershapes, and fortifies the ideals that mankind apes, as the daily

pace gives way to a violent peace, the outlaw's ghost and the memory

police, and dreams that can't sleep at night, by morning have no

strength left to fight, and the moon shines sweetly on the rivers flow,

and there's a headache where really a tree should
grow.

Blinds that keep the sunlight out and the electric light in, natures

shameless display and artificial sin, boneless mechanisms memorize

your soul, soft surgery of desire puts the doctor in control, the sinews of the body politic beast, pour the honey in the horns of the feast, for the insurance man another heartbreaks claim, made a prison of there

shelter for there fifteen minutes of fame, half mooned and hawk driven

the beautiful nighttime sky, and where the truth should blossom the soil can only seed a lie.

In the church of some manmade god, what is holy cannot penetrate the facade, the world of worries rebuilds the world of wonders, but the foundation shakes every time it thunders, in effigy on the walls of will,
brush strokes sabotage the color of real, photosynthesis and capitalism, the nature of the beast lost in this schism, it's a beautiful
world but we look at it thru a window, living what we believe ignoring what we know.
