Waiting for robin hood just sitting here in this noisy little nowhere, wondering about someday and if we'll ever get there, but i'm scared that it's desire that makes you greedy, but wanting to much ain't what makes you needy trying to separate the what does from the what should, tired of waiting for justice i'm waiting for robin hood man that sewer stinks like the devils kitchen, that smell mingles with the sound of the neighbors bi***en, you can't get out of this place it's like a sixth sense inside your head, the cops trying to convince me i'd be better off dead trying to wash all the bad out of what's left that's good, following cain waiting for robin hood and this f***ing job i've got can barely feed me, it's just another way for the vampires to bleed me, the ones with the unfair advantage decide what's fair, but i guess i'm just like 'em because i can't pretend to care and i know it won't no matter how much i wish it would, the only thing left to do waiting for robin hood comes a time when you don't want to die you'll have to kill, be it the devil's way or god's will, but they ain't got nothing i want that's worth dying for, think maybe i'll drive downtown and find me a whore when all you know is can't you just pretend you could, you see you get kind'a restless waiting for robin hood.
