"The End"

I dragged the world into my footsteps Å– she said what more could you want.
And afraid of what might happen, she closed her eyes and led me strong.
She breathed into my open mouth and my fingertips went numb,
But my eyes could see so clearly.

The sun screamed yellow symphonies as the notes streamed across the sky.
And nighttime in it jealousy trailed in black so close behind.
All the people stared in wonder, as the universe unfolds.
And the cold kiss from her thunder left it's mark upon my clothes.

And the world came falling down, down, down, down.
The world came falling down.
The world came falling down, down, down, down.
The world came falling down.

All the people ran in circles, while time and fate both laughed.
And the future met it's destiny, as it crossed blows with the past.
All the mountains crumbled 'round me, while the water poured right through.
And the world, she looked right at me, with no thought of what to do.

Oh I cursed into the heavens till my lungs had no breathe left.
And she struck with all her lightning and left scars across my chest.
But with eyes wet full of meaning, I couldn't stop or lie
So I reached my arms straight upward, and I tore right through sky.

And the world came falling down, down, down, down.
The world came falling down.

The world came falling down, down, down, down.
The world came falling down.
