a better mistake
sign on the clock taller grandfather wish he could stop waving her little flag nobody turns
they must get tired of saying it's your imagination torn up daydream what's the point in trying silent count
those eyes are gonna rust under the lesson lights no one to wind her right it's never time to leave invisible side is showing nothing to cover up her mind it's just a pebble in a river he makes her let them practice on her it's just a sign off in the distance afraid they're never gonna fall asleep room with the other girls eyes closed heads to the wall stay on our side we're not allowed to see them he's just a lie they're trying to make us believe in
