"Carry The Weight"

I've been crawling on my hands and knees for days Through the desert, I've been hoping for some rain and Breeze to cool the heat and get back on my feet
I never thought that I'd be the one to hope for shade

Whatever you may think there's always something you will never know
The way back home is always slow
Whatever path you take there's always something standing in the way
It's bound to make you go insane
I carry the weight

I've been living blinded by the sunlit skies
All around me, the sand is burning in my eyes
I'm lost and chasing faces
Glowing in the distance
I can see the drifting dreams of better days

Whatever you may think there's always something you
will never know
The way back home is always slow
Whatever path you take there's always something
standing in the way
It's bound to make you go insane
I carry the weight
