

Nevermore "The Learning"

I think therefore I am, I live and so I wonder, programmed this empath me
And I see no religion
The circle never ends, the purpose never changes face
The circle never lies, but still it hides my life To know I am machine, I learn perchance to dream, in digitized remorse
I replay your denial, I relive your betrayal
The circle never ends, the purpose never changes face
The learning now begins, my form assuming grace I am conscious antithesis of flesh, in genetic algorithmic thought I surge Searching the waves of memory I enact the sequence
I follow the plan, tripping the hammer again Searching the waves of memory I establish the weakness
I follow the plan, learning the rhythm of human emotion and thought
If you cannot linguistically differentiate a person from a computer
Could the computer be internally conscious?
To emulate flesh machines I am learning Isomorphic structure of mind, cellular automata, processed life
Washing the seas of memory I enact the sequence
I follow the plan tripping the hammer again
Seeking emotions in elegies I establish purpose I follow the plan, learning the rhythm still seductively generalized
If you cannot linguistically differentiate a person from
a computer
Could the computer be internally conscious?
To emulate flesh machines I am learning download, process, analyze when man and machine become one,
innocence is lost, a new age begun Download, process, analyse
when man and machine become one,
innocence is lost, a new age begun
This raises a question of philosophy Should machines be considered a conscious entity?
when man and machine become one,

innocence is lost, a new age begun machines are still learning to feel when I have awakened the world will never be the same and my time is soon at hand
