you didn't give me answer when i asked you where you were going you gave me a brief glance, devoid of expression, as you walked out the door and i just stood there disbelieving, but all the while knowing that you could not find any reason to stay with me one minute more but how can you say, how can you say you don't know me when i have been there for you, there for you through thick and thin and how could you one day suddenly say you were too tired of trying you tell me there's no use denying it, there's simply no other way

now with every confidence broken and every vow unfulfilled tell me the words that will shatter the will that keeps me hanging on

what were you trying to tell me when all of those time through the years i reached out but you turned me away was i so tied up in my world that when you spoke i wasn't listening until eventually there was nothing at all left to say well i cannot tell you enough times how sorry i am and i cannot undo the pain or the lingering hurt i have caused but if we both are ready and willing to change maybe we can still recover a love that so nearly was lost but if you've got other intentions, well that means we end here send me a signal and please make it clear and end this marathon

don't leave me waiting here, tell me, tell me you know the line's nearly broken and it's time we choose do we make repairs or do we sever it completely this silent distance between us grows wider every day and it's only a matter of time either way end this marathon
