I guess it started when the lights went out and everybody started running round in circles tryin to
I could feel it wedged in my ribs it felt freezin as my cold air blew out dance through the evening, paranormal slowly being called to the green where the ghosts gather nightly and sell the devil their dreams, i observe hails from the other side of the curb hold the concrete notepad scribble down my words in the limelight this is what it's like to bleed ink put your fingers in it paint me a picture of what you think make it beautiful and make it look like love make it hang from the heavens make it break my trust make it real make it dangerous make it out of the rust make it passionate and impossible to touch it's forever slowly resurrected from the dust when you understand its everything inside of you, its us.
You're all I've ever known So to my sleep
You always got me running home Count for the roses You're my blood and brittle bones, my soul and open throne
You're all I know Ive spoke a whisper in the dark one night watch it take form in front of me and mimic my life it seemed natural specially watching its last breathe like poetry watch as it clung to its own chest with a smile made out of broken pieces of tile you can see the thoughts running chase em around for miles

if you want it people say that old road is haunted if you travel on it long enough you'll never get off it you believe it cause everything is skewed when you see it then you process automatically think that you feel it and automatically sticks to the brain when the truth of it is standing outside playing cards in the rain you will never beat the game it plays you can only turn around and lick the blood from your own switchblade its forever slowly resurrected from the dust
us.
