A seismic sound fell down from the sky through the star-knit night to land in my mind settled deep inside the truth came to light

How sweet the taste of it upon my lips
Though I struggled first and fought with it
It was a deafening sound
A seismic sound

A seismic sound tore through my ribs
And from my chest
I blew it's raging hiss
Though the words were free
I still longed for it

The large release of courage from my lips
Though I struggled first and fought with it
It was a deafening sound
A seismic sound

No more dreaming of the day
When I and strength itself would be one
No more fighting for that drop of hope and bravery in my sternum

No more dreaming of the day
When I and strength itself would be one
No more fighting for that drop of hope
and bravery in my sternum
I could feel it on my fingertips and in my bones that we've won

We've won.
