Blurry eyes half bent and I can't take you sober Tricking off the rotting strip that we've been trudging under We ducked into a dim lit room out where the river bends
And turned to walk the burning bridge that we would build
And crossed our hearts half hoping That we could both quit smoking
And kick the booze and blow
And one day go make something of ourselves

Glory came and went the night we both slipped under 'Neath the row of oil slicks and ancient ugly lovers Some they say the price you pay is far too much to spend
But they don't know the cost is fair if for a while It keeps your heart from crumbling

And we'd take what we want when we knew what we wanted
When we wished we had something to lose
You were a fine young thing crammed in your tight red vinyl jeans
I was a third rate going nowhere burning for nothing to do

Boredom settled in and I can't take you sober Strewn across the rotting strip that we've been building over 'Til nothing made it's wicked way slow creeping into view
Where we could watch the burning bridge that we half built Across our hearts now broken
And we could both quit smoking
And kick the booze and blow
And one day go make something of ourselves

And we'd take what we want when we knew what we wanted

You were a fine young thing crammed in your tight red
vinyl jeans
I was a third rate going nowhere burning for nothing to do

So we branded our hearts and we toasted the stars Getting wasted by the light of the moon
You were a two bit tramp - I was a low life lying scum We were a bad lay coming undone burning for someone to use
