Hey there heart of stone, why are you oh so cold and all alone?

I've a story for you
About a servant king who loves you

From a wooden throne He gave up His life for His kingdom
And said with a simple voice, "Father, please forgive them"
And as the tears ran flowing from His eyes
Mingled with the blood and water pouring from His side

You thought men don't cry

Hey there heart of stone, what are you oh so cold and all alone?

You've heard of [other] tales and stories told
But none have ever satisfied your soul

Don't you know?

From a wooden throne He gave up His life for His
kingdom
And said with a simple voice, "Father, please forgive
them"
And as the tears ran flowing from His eyes
Mingled with the blood and water flowing from His side

You still thought men don't cry

Well, you beat Him down - this man of sorrows
And you slapped His face - no hope for tomorrow And you said, "how can someone so weak save a wretch like me!?"

'Cause the truth is real men cry
