Dead still in the city as six million faces drain of blood Hearts beat in denial, we can't hope to stem the coming flood

This cerberus, it comes for us, we bear a watchful eye Our natures true now shining through, our lives all consumed by a constant watch of the sky

When the rain pours in we drown in sin to quench our thirst

Now let the end begin, there's something indescribable
In living when the end is so damn close
As we drink the dying dose

Bright sky in the summer shines another day on this failing sphere

Don't breathe too deeply, no time to exhale when the end is near

Apophis, who is fueling you to shatter what was whole?
What lies between this holocene and in the great after,
who will reclaim this soul?

When the rain pours in we drown in sin to quench our
thirst

Now let the end begin, there's something indescribable
In living when the end is so damn close

As we drink the dying dose

We're martyrs to a cause we never knew

When there's nothing left to do but die

As our shades float in the sea, will you wait for me?

It's not enough

Dark wash over, be the nothing we have rightly earned
