My heart beats in my ears and my blood pulses like hell
In a bottle,
It gets ready to break and as the internal flood begins and make no mistake this is my final try

My sanity is bearing down on me Your life is a joy defective way of living My beliefs are at best fragile and forgiving when I'm told that a certain tame beast is coming Kill me before you wake me

The storm approaches the time has come,
This world we once knew now washed away
My dreams are not my reality
This is hell, and its mine to share

You taught me to judge because this world is too unforgiving and far too relentless I can take this emulated life no longer the hell it promises just gets stronger My thoughts are sympathetic at best

When all my ideals are put to test I find a way out with zen in murder.
The veil slips away, revealing the face of a greater being, a light in a fire separate from the flames that burn merrily the presence of a godly illumination

The storm approaches the time has come,
The world we once knew now washed away,
My dreams are not my reality,
This is hell, and its mine to share

This world must change for your sins, else I'll make you give this world for your life They won't want it but I will and I will put up a fight You forget the simplicity of animalistic over powerment and I just can't wait to show you wrong you were This world can change, and you can too Allow me to show you the ropes god tied to this planet and cut them apart

This world can change but I fear for the worst
