Dawn, why were you hiding
Your clouds just melted through the horizon
They were gold, red and purple
Peeling backwards in the sun
Like the layers of a rose

The night held me as hostage
With its black blanket over my eyelids
Couldn't go any further
Than I ever did desire
From the cold comfort of your ghost

Quicksand in the foggy woods behind me, -hind me
Flashing haunting images of darker times
But like the child who sees only what he's after
I didn't spy the other spinning gears in tandem

Gone, but not forgotten
Above, above, but not beyond it
Tore it down and teased the remnants
But thinking too much means to ache
And we're better when we don't

Quicksand in the foggy woods behind me, -hind me
Flashing haunting images of darker times
But like the child who sees only what he's after
I didn't catch the signs pointing towards the better plan
